PREFACE

In a democracy national policy is based on the desires of the people. In order to clarify these desires and to press for their fulfillment men form organizations for study and action. In the United States these organizations cover all fields of human enterprise, one of the most important of which is that concerned with international affairs.

The relations between nations are important in peace time; during a period when the world is in conflict they are vital. For all countries at such a time are either actually or potentially allies or foes; and a knowledge of them and of their aims is of prime importance. The outbreak of war has, therefore, increased the number of agencies in the United States which deal with international affairs; and has altered the policies and programs of others which were earlier established. There is a need for up-to-date information about them, and it is to assist in meeting this need that the Council on Foreign Relations has decided to issue this directory.

American Agencies Interested in International Affairs includes pertinent data on organizations engaged in research and other activities which, in some cases, are not strictly international, but which have a direct or indirect bearing on the subject. A few international organizations—as opposed to American—have been listed because their work is largely centered in the United States and their guidance is largely in the hands of Americans.

Of more than 500 organizations to which questionnaires were sent, only 58 had not been heard from at the time of going to press. Some which replied were not included because, on the basis of their returns, they did not fall within the scope of this directory.

In general, the following have been arbitrarily eliminated:

1. Official organizations supported by governments;
2. Social and purely cultural organizations;
3. Schools and Divisions of Universities except when they are offering specific community programs;
4. Committees on International Relations which are branches of national organizations;

5. Relief organizations.

All data included has been taken from reports supplied by the organizations concerned. No attempt has been made by the Compiler to appraise their work.

A feature which is perhaps novel for a directory, but which it is felt will be useful, is the inclusion of a list of those agencies which have discontinued their activities or are dormant.

Two indexes have been included:

1. The Subject Index, on the basis of their programs, classifies agencies both under their primary and their supplemental spheres of interest;

2. The Personnel Index lists both officers and staff members associated with these agencies.

The Library of the Council on Foreign Relations attempts to maintain up-to-date information on the agencies listed and will supply such data upon request. It would, therefore, appreciate being informed concerning any organizations which may inadvertently have been omitted.

The Compiler wishes to express her appreciation to all the officials who have been so gracious in supplying information; and to members of her staff—Estelle Smucker and Martha Reid—who have helped in the preparation of material.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE: RESEARCH INSTITUTE ON PEACE AND POST-WAR PROBLEMS

Director: Max Gottschalk

Definition: To promote a better understanding of the situation of Jews; to aid in the defense of their rights in the free forum of the world’s conscience; and to provide authoritative information for future efforts in the field of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

Founded: 1941.

Organization: A special department of the American Jewish Committee, governed by its Committee on Peace Studies. Chairman, Morris R. Cohen; Secretary, Moses Moskovitz.

Staff: Director; Abraham G. Duker; Eugene Hevesi, Moses Moskovitz, Simon Segal and Louis Shub.

Activities: The program of the Institute is divided into three major divisions: (1) Political, economic, and social problems;
(2) Migration and colonization; (3) Relief and reconstruction.

Division 1 is studying all questions related to the restoration of Jewish rights and the adjustment of Jews to postwar conditions, including a survey and analysis of the various pronouncements, plans and proposals for postwar reconstruction.

Division 2 is concerned with the potential areas of emigration and the likely character of the emigrants; the potential areas of immigration and the political, legal, financial, and organizational problems involved in migration and colonization.

Division 3 is studying past efforts and present methods of relief and reconstruction in order to establish criteria for more effective and long range techniques for the constructive administration of relief. Where scholarly material already exists, the function of the Institute is to collect, arrange, index and classify all available material and information and to make it available for consultation by those engaged in a particular study; where existing institutions are better equipped to investigate particular problems, the Institute cooperates with such groups and also entrusts studies to independent scholars.

COUNCIL ON FOREIGN RELATIONS, INC.

45 East 65th Street, New York City

Executive Director: Walter H. Mallory

Definition: A non-partisan and non-commercial organization to study the international aspects of America's political, economic, and financial problems.

Founded: During the war; in 1920 united with the "American Institute of International Affairs," which was formed at the Paris Peace Conference. Incorporated in 1921.

Organization: Incorporated body governed by a Board of 18 Directors. President, Norman H. Davis; Vice-President, Frank L. Polk; Secretary, Allen W. Dulles; Acting Treasurer, George O. May.

Finance: Membership fees, contributions, and foundation grants.

Staff: Executive Director; Editor of Foreign Affairs (Hamilton Fish Armstrong); Director of Studies (Percy W. Bidwell); Librarian (Ruth Savard); Business Manager (Frank D. Caruthers, Jr.); and the necessary assistants for the administration of the Council's activities and the development of its research program.

Activities: The aim of the Council is to develop, by scientific and impartial study, a better understanding of international problems, and an intelligent American foreign policy. This is achieved by:

(1) General Meetings: Dinners where distinguished American and foreign guests are entertained and where an opportunity is afforded for discussion of the broader phases of America's attitude toward current international problems;

(2) Group Dinners: More technical in nature than the general meetings, the participants are selected because of their expertness or special interest in the subject under review and discussions are off-the-record;

(3) Study Groups: Organized for detailed examination of a particular problem or issue, each group of approximately 30 members has a Chairman and Rapporteur and meets for several sessions. On occasion reports, articles, and books appear as by-products of the discussions;

(4) Foreign Relations Committees: Beginning in 1938, the Council organized in cities throughout the country, Committees on Foreign Relations comprised of 25 to 35 responsible men who have an interest in, or knowledge of, international affairs, and who represent in their local community a variety of points of view;

(5) Conferences for University Men: These are held to give outstanding seniors and graduate students an opportunity to discuss with men of affairs and government officials the international problems facing the country;

(6) Seminar for Junior Executives: Designed to provide a continuation course in international economic relations for qualified young men who deal daily with the details of economics and finance in banks, export houses, shipping firms, law offices, etc.

(7) Rockefeller Fellows: The Fellowships afford an opportunity to young scholars to broaden their outlook and give them an opportunity for sustained research in American foreign policy unhampered by teaching responsibilities. During the term of their fellowship they serve as rapporteurs for the Council Study Groups in New York.
(8) War and Peace Studies: This project covers five fields of inquiry: 1) Strategy and armaments; 2) Economic and financial; 3) Political; 4) Territorial; 5) Peace aims.

Membership: Membership is by invitation of the Board of Directors only. It is limited to American citizens and includes men of many professions having special experience and interest in international affairs. The number of members is limited (in order that freedom in discussion may be maintained) to 400 resident members and 250 non-resident members.

Membership Fees: Resident, $100; Non-Resident, $50; Academic, $15; Non-Resident Academic, $10.

Facilities for Study: A reference library of about 20,000 volumes is maintained. It provides documentary, source and current material (including clipping files) in international law and relations, economics, political science and allied subject fields. It contains almost complete sets of the publications of the League of Nations, and Permanent Court of International Justice, a broken file of International Labour Office publications and complete file of reports of all Territories under Mandate; one of the 40 sets of David Hunter Miller's "Diary at the Peace Conference," and is a depository for the publications of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. In addition to documentary and other material on World War I, the Library has, since September 1939, attempted to secure all documentation and other material on the present conflict and maintains large clipping files of newspaper, periodical, and pamphlet material. The Council acquired its own building in 1929, where facilities for conferences and meetings are provided and where its library and other activities are housed.

Publications:

(1) Foreign Affairs, a quarterly review dealing with the political, economic, and financial aspects of American foreign policy. Each issue includes "Recent Books on International Relations" and "Source Material." $5.
